Investigation begins after partial building collapse

Dorchester. No injuries were reported after parts of a building fell Tuesday afternoon.

The city's Inspectional Services Department is looking into the cause of a partial building collapse that happened around noon Tuesday on Washington Street in Dorchester.

Boston Fire officials responded to a block of stores at 497-501 Washington Street at 12:12 p.m. after what appeared to be the facade of the building falling down, scattering rubble and debris onto the sidewalk.

"The outer brick wall let go onto the sidewalk," the fire department said in an official tweet at 2:43 p.m.

No injuries were reported, however the building was apparently occupied when the collapse happened as fire officials said the structure was evacuated.

The property is a one-story commercial building with several businesses, according to fire officials.

Building inspectors from the Inspectional Services Department were on scene following the incident, fire officials said, and the property owner planned to have an engineer access structure.

Businesses will remain closed for the time being, fire officials said.

One of the damaged storefronts bears a sign for "Active Chiropractic Rehab." Its neighboring storefront appeared to have space for lease. Calls made to the rehabilitation center were not returned by press time Tuesday.

Photographs taken at the scene around 2 p.m. showed brick and other building material piled across the sidewalk and strewn into the street. The area was blocked off by yellow police tape and police barriers.

Harvard pranksters caught at rival Yale

Will Yalies pull their own prank on Harvard's campus?
NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

A group of Harvard pranksters who previously led bogus tours of Yale were caught red-handed on the New Haven campus in the run-up to this year's Harvard-Yale football game.

The group, a comedy troupe that produces nine-minute satirical news segments called "On Harvard Time," were producing a new segment, according to The Yale Daily News.

The paper reported the Crimson pranksters, decked out in Yale gear, quizzed Yalies about the upcoming game against Harvard and the school's athletics. They staged a mock protest against Yale football and encouraged the school to slash funding for athletics and invest more in academics. Members of the group also carried signs, one of which read "God hates sports." Ultimately, a Yale Facebook group outed the impostors.

The troupe pulled off a stunt last year where they donned Yale gear and pretended to be Yale students while giving tours of the university. DANNY MCDONALD

Stop the presses

BU newspaper in danger of closing

Boston University's only independent student-run newspaper, The Daily Free Press, is in danger of closing.

The Daily Free Press is strapped with $70,000 in debt according to a press release posted by the paper Tuesday.

If most of that debt is not resolved before the end of 2014, publisher Turley Publications said it will cease publishing.

In an attempt to stave off closure, the paper has launched a "GoFundMe" fundraising campaign.

Recently, The Daily Free Press has changed to a weekly print cycle to cut costs. METRO

Air National Guard to hold F-15 flyover

The Massachusetts Air National Guard is planning a 37-minute flyover of five F-15 fighter jets Thursday as part of a media event coordinated with the Federal Aviation Administration.

The fighter jets are expected to depart Hanscom Air Force Base in Bedford at 8:10 a.m., and will pass over Boston at an elevation of 1,000 feet at 8:16 a.m. and over Fenway Park at 8:18 a.m., according to the National Guard.

The Hub skyline will be peppered with F-15s Thursday morning.

The flyover is also expected to pass over Gillette Stadium, Cape Cod and Nantucket before wrapping up over Martha's Vineyard at 8:47 a.m. METRO

LGBT vets march in Boston Veterans Day Parade

About a dozen LGBT military veterans marched for the first time Tuesday in the city's annual Veterans Day Parade.

Members of OutVets, a Boston-based group that raises awareness about the service of lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender servicemen and servicewomen, marched in the downtown parade. The group aims to build a memorial honoring LGBT service.

An OutVets spokesman told the Associated Press that parade organizers have embraced the group with "open arms and strong support." METRO

Cider at core of this weekend's Craft Beer Fest

Theatre District. Craft hard cider — how do you like them apples?

Visit Metro.us for a full list of brewers to be showcased at this weekend's festival.

Organizers of an upcoming craft beer festival hope to broaden the palates of Boston beer lovers by introducing them to the bright, bubbly luster of craft hard ciders.

The Drink Craft Beer Fall to Winter Fest kicks off Friday at Revere Hotel's Space 57, offering attendees roughly 70 beers and over 20 different hard ciders. Drink Craft Beer co-founder Jeff Wharton said the amped up cider offering is in response to an uptick in demand.

"Almost all cider brands are quite local. They're part of the community," said Wharton, who expects 1,650 people to turn out over the two-day event.

"It has such a history here – 200 years ago, cider was far more common than beer," said Wharton. "It's very much a New England beverage."

Hard cider brewer Ross Brockman, 26, co-founded Downeast Cider House in Charlestown in 2011 when he was fresh out of Bates College.

"The younger generation is not as self-conscious about drinking ciders and cocktails. They're just interested in what tastes good," said Brockman, whose cider will be featured this weekend.

The brewery produces 7,500 barrels, or roughly 233,000 gallons, of hard cider each year. But demand has been growing, and Brockman anticipates production to triple next year.

"I'd say hard cider still has room to grow," he said.

Methuen. Drill shows off nation's first school shooting prevention technology

Methuen Police conducted a live active shooter drill at a school on Tuesday — an exercise intended to show the benefits of a first-in-the-nation shooter detection system.

The system tells police where the shooter is in real time.

Manufactured by the Rowley-based Shooter Detection Systems LLC, the technology uses audio and visual sensors to convey where a shooter is located in the building to school officials and law enforcement authorities.

The system, which features small smoke-alarm-size sensors, could cost upward of $100,000.

Methuen Police Chief Joseph Solomon suggested the system represented a natural progression in school security. By 2002, he said, his department had already started training police how to respond to a school shooting.

"Our officers know exactly where the shooter is, how many shots were fired and if the shooter is moving to different areas of the building," Solomon said. "It would save several minutes in a real-life situation, and that could mean dozens of lives saved."

According to gun-control advocacy group Everytown, there have been 88 shootings in the U.S. since the December 2012 shooting in Newtown, Connecticut, that killed 20 children and six school employees.

NY doctor free of Ebola, discharged from hospital

Disease free. The discharge of Dr. Craig Spencer means no one in the U.S. is being treated for the deadly virus.

Dr. Spencer after being declared free of the disease / GETTY IMAGES

A New York doctor who has recovered from Ebola left the hospital on Tuesday and urged support for U.S. health workers treating patients in West Africa so they do not face "stigma and threats" when they return home.

The discharge of Dr. Craig Spencer, 33, who worked with Ebola patients in Guinea and had been held in isolation at Bellevue Hospital Center since he was diagnosed with the virus on Oct. 23, means no one in the United States is being treated for the disease.

Looking gaunt but happy, Spencer high-fived Bellevue nurses and was hugged by New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, the city's first lady Chirlane McCray and a handful of other officials at a news conference before his release.

"My infection represents a fraction of the more than 13,000 reported cases in West Africa, the center of the outbreak," said Spencer, a physician from New York-Presbyterian/Columbia University Medical Center who worked overseas with Doctors Without Borders. REUTERS

Litigation. Apple to face lawsuit over vanishing text Android messages

Apple Inc. was ordered to face a federal lawsuit claiming it failed to tell consumers that its messaging system would block them from receiving text messages if they switched to Android-based smartphones from iPhones.

U.S. District Judge Lucy Koh in San Jose, California, said Apple must face plaintiff Adrienne Moore's claim that the message blocking interfered with her contract with Verizon Wireless for wireless service, which she kept after switching in April to a Samsung Galaxy S5 from an iPhone 4.

The case involves a plaintiff who switched to a Galaxy S5. / GETTY IMAGES

Moore, who seeks class-action status and unspecified damages, claimed that Apple failed to disclose how its iOS 5 software operating system would obstruct the delivery of "countless" messages from other Apple device users if iPhone users switched to non-Apple devices.

In a Monday night decision, Koh said Moore deserved a chance to show Apple disrupted her wireless service contract and violated a California unfair competition law by blocking messages meant for her.

"Plaintiff does not have to allege an absolute right to receive every text message in order to allege that Apple's intentional acts have caused an actual breach or disruption of the contractual relationship," Koh wrote. REUTERS

Gov. Nixon to outline plans for decision on police shooting

Missouri Gov. Jay Nixon said on Tuesday violence will not be tolerated in any protests that come after a grand jury decides whether to indict a white police officer for shooting dead an unarmed black teen in the St. Louis suburb of Ferguson.

Nixon said he would bring in police from around the state and have the National Guard on standby for the grand jury decision that is likely to come in mid- to late November. REUTERS

1 JLaw quits the Internet and it's all your fault!

GETTY IMAGES

Great job, haters. You've gone and scared off Jennifer Lawrence. The "Hunger Games" star insists she has instituted a firm anti-social-media stance, and it's all because you couldn't play nice. "The Internet has scorned me so much that I feel like it's that girl in high school that I'm like, 'Oh, you want to talk about her? Yeah, I'll do that!' Take my hoops off, I'm ready to go," she says in a BBC radio interview.

But it's not just scorn that's keeping her away. Lawrence thinks she just can't handle Twitter. "I don't really understand what it is. It's like this weird enigma that people talk about. It's fine, I respect that, but no, I'll never get a Twitter," she says. Aww, she says "a Twitter" just like my 72-year-old aunt. That's adorable. "If you ever see a Facebook, Instagram or Twitter that says it's me, it most certainly is not." Maybe someone should tell her about her official Facebook page. It just so happens that almost 11 million people have clicked "like" on that page.

2 Britney 'allowed' to date new guy

Britney Spears can apparently carry on with her new boyfriend, TV producer Charlie Ebersol, now that he's passed her dad's extensive round of background checks. "Anyone dating Britney must undergo a background check and sign a confidentiality agreement," a source says, according to Star magazine. "Obviously, Charlie made the cut." About that confidentiality agreement: In a show of good faith, Spears' dad "offered to pay Ebersol's legal fees if he needed someone to look it over." Ah, young love.

In other "totally not getting the Internet" news, Bill Cosby got more than he bargained for this week when he asked fans online to "meme" him, offering a meme generator on his site where fans could put block text over photos of him from "The Cosby Show" a la Lolcats. (Remember Lolcats?) Well, a lot of people used it, only they used it to reference allegations of rape made against the comic a decade ago. His team deleted his initial tweet and took down the meme generator as fast as possible, but not before some choice screen grabs went up.

Conan O'Brien posted yet another installment of his hilarious series, "Clueless Gamer," with a look at the new "Assassin's Creed: Unity," which takes place during the French Revolution. FELICITY JONES
FILMMAGIC

Felicity Jones plays more than the wife

Interview. The "Theory of Everything" star says her role is not just Mrs. Stephen Hawking.

Felicity Jones has a habit of playing partners of powerful men — and her characters are as interesting as the men they love. In "The Invisible Woman" she was Nelly Ternan, Charles Dickens' secret mistress. Equally formidable is Jane Hawking, the now-ex-wife of theoretical physicist Stephen Hawking in "The Theory of Everything."

It's odd that a devout Christian such as Jane got along so well with Stephen, who is such a famous atheist.
Jane was very much a part of Stephen's intellectual life. ... They shared an intellectual empathy with each other. When he lost the ability to write, she would type up his theses and the early drafts of his books.

You portray her as more than just "the wife of a great man."
There's this cool determination and survival instinct. Both she and Stephen just don't care. They're really rock 'n' roll. They're not bothered about what everyone is thinking.

She suffers, but never makes a big deal of it.
In my notes I was always writing "unsentimental, unsentimental, unsentimental." There was no self-pity. I think that's a very English, postwar mentality. ... Keep calm and carry on.

Acting prep

Becoming Jane

You actually got to speak to the person you were playing this time.
Meeting Jane after reading her book gave me so much more material. I was watching her intensely. ... She has these very ladylike qualities. I worked with a movement coach to capture how that changes over 20 years. Then her voice is very high-pitched. ... She said I got her voice.

Go for the gold

Design. The glam metal is having a major moment in home decor.

Scroll through your favorite design blogs, Pinterest boards or home catalogs and it'll be hard to ignore the vast amount of fancy gold objects staring back at you. But when did our current obsession with the metal start?

"I think everything starts with fashion and then trickles down," says Christiane Lemieux, founder of DwellStudio and executive creative director of Wayfair, about the decor trend. "A few seasons ago, designers like Etro were showing neo-1920s deco-inspired fashion. The deco period was the height of black and brass. This was followed by the revival of 'The Great Gatsby,' and all things deco just escalated."

Nowadays, you can find just about any product from a stapler to pendant lamp to dish rack and even crib in sparkly gold or matte brass. And no matter which finish you prefer, these objects add a bit of glamour and warmth to your everyday.

But enjoy the trend now, says Lemieux, because soon it'll be all about copper. "It's the next 'it' metal!" she says.

Andrew Solomon on the dignity of a chosen death

Assisted suicide. The psychologist argues for the right to die.

Andrew Solomon's mother chose to end her life with a prescribed medication after battling ovarian cancer.
ANNIE LEIBOVITZ

The end of a life is inevitably tragic — but what if an even bigger tragedy could be avoided by hastening it?

That was the eventuality that 29-year-old Brittany Maynard avoided. On Nov. 1, supported by her family and the millions around the world who learned about her choice to end her life before an aggressive brain tumor could leech it from her slowly and painfully, Maynard took a prescribed dose of lethal medication.

To get that prescription, Maynard moved with her family to Oregon, one of only five states with a "Death with Dignity" law that allows for assisted suicide, in which a doctor can provide medication to end the life of a dying patient who's deemed mentally competent. Whether the option should be available nationwide, or banned entirely, will be the subject of an Intelligence Squared U.S. debate taking place tomorrow, with passionate advocates on both sides.

One of the issue's supporters, distinguished author and Columbia University professor of clinical psychology Andrew Solomon, has written about his mother's assisted suicide in 1991 after a years-long battle with ovarian cancer. He calls Maynard "little short of heroic" for devoting the final months of her life to speaking about the issue — and giving it a new face.

"People tend to distance themselves from the very old and sick until they themselves are very old and sick," Solomon tells Metro. "I think having someone who is young and beautiful and articulate who appeared to have a happy marriage and a close relationship with her parents ... forced people to think, 'Oh, this isn't just a debate that has nothing to do with me, this is a debate that could be relevant to me at a moment's notice.'"

Solomon's mother's decision was influenced by having watched one of her best friends die of cancer "in pain that was not well-controlled and in a state of relative incoherence. My mother just said, 'The person I saw in that hospital bed was not Sandy. She was not the Sandy I had known and loved for many years, and I don't want you to remember me like that and I don't want to go through that experience.'"

Currently, the law requires that a patient be diagnosed with a terminal illness to have the option of assisted suicide. Though Solomon supports strict guidelines on who that choice is made available to, that standard doesn't include everyone whose quality of life no longer satisfies them.

"I think it's important there be many precautions put into place so that people don't commit suicide because they have conditions that are reversible, including some element of depression, which can often be a response to diagnosis of a catastrophic illness," he says.

"Having said that, I've seen people who have ALS or even people who have Alzheimer's who are at a point at which they no longer wish to go on, and the question of whether people who have not been given the specific kind of amulet of the six months to live, whether those people should have access to the right to die is complicated and nuanced simply because it's more open to reinterpretation and misuse."

He encouraged those around the dying person to show their love by being supportive in whatever way they need.

"I think the respectful thing is to try as deeply as you can to understand the wishes of the dying person, to understand the ramifications of those wishes, to sort out whether those wishes are crazy, irrational or coming out of severe depression, or coming out of a carefully thought-through understanding of the value of life."

Tune in

The Legalize Assisted Suicide debate will take place Nov. 13 at 6:45 p.m. Watch it at IntelligenceSquaredUS.org.

'An uphill battle'

The trauma of doctors

Solomon, a psychologist, has concerns about palliative care specialists being "often quite agenda-driven," but says that overall, there is more willingness by doctors to express the sympathy they feel for a dying person's wishes. None of them tried to convince Solomon's family that his mother should endure the final stages of cancer, but any loss of life affects them, too.

"I still think it's an uphill battle. Medical education is so focused on preserving life, and I think it's traumatic for doctors to have not only the loss of someone they've developed a relationship to but also the acknowledgment of the limitations of medical science. That in some sense, everyone who makes this choice seems to point a light of failure onto medicine, and of course medicine, like all other disciplines, has its great successes — and places where not everything can be accomplished," he says.

Net neutrality benefits the average citizen and President Obama is right to support it

Internet carriers want to make more money from regular citizens by bamboozling us into giving up Net neutrality — giving up our right to transmit data on the Internet without paying more for faster speeds.

Currently, we get fast speeds for everything, but Internet companies want us to pay for what we are now getting for free. It's a straight-up bad deal for regular citizens, which is why we flooded the FCC with comments against any change.

But it's as good as found money for Internet carriers, which is why they are paid to get the FCC commissioners in their pocket.

Now President Obama has come out on regular citizens' side and is advocating for Net neutrality.

If we don't like the rich getting richer by picking our pockets, it's a no-brainer.

We should support Net neutrality.

Some things just aren't funny, Chris Rock

I'm disgusted by Chris Rock's comments about the Boston Marathon Saturday on "Saturday Night Live." It's an absolute disgrace what he said, and the weird thing is, the New York audience laughed and clapped about it. Why isn't the Boston media on this? This man obviously wrote his lines before the show. He also made comments about the World Trade Center. I don't get it. This fella needs to apologize to the victims and their families.

Bruins headed north with renewed vigor

NHL. The B's face a tough back-to-back in Canada as they'll face the Maple Leafs and Canadiens.

Monday's 4-2 win over the Devils at TD Garden was the exclamation point to a very successful homestand for the Bruins. Boston (10-6-0) has won its last five games to vault from near the bottom of the Atlantic Division to three points behind first-place Tampa Bay and one point behind Montreal.

The key for the B's is to keep things rolling this week as the games figure to get more difficult. They are in Toronto (8-5-2) on Wednesday (8 p.m., NBCSN) and then in Montreal (10-4-1) the following night (7:30 p.m., NESN). Along with the Lightning and Red Wings, these are the clubs they'll be battling for playoff position all season.

The common element to this current run has been strong defense and goaltending. The B's defense has overcome injuries to Zdeno Chara, Kevan Miller, Torey Krug and David Warsofsky so far, and goaltender Tuukka Rask, who struggled at the beginning of the season, has picked it up in November.

Boston's offense still isn't exactly explosive, but the good sign is that many of its top players are starting to play up to their capabilities. With a goal and two assists on Monday, Patrice Bergeron has two goals and four assists in his last four games. Linemate Reilly Smith had a goal and an assist Monday, giving him a modest three-game point streak. Carl Soderberg had a power-play goal against New Jersey and, quietly, he's been the Bruins' most consistent forward with two goals and four assists in his last five games.

Boston lost 6-4 at Montreal on Oct. 16, but came back on Oct. 25 to beat Toronto 4-1. It's likely that Niklas Svedberg will make his first start since Oct. 30 on Wednesday against Toronto, giving Rask some rest before he faces the Canadiens.

Celtics host beat-up Thunder

Normally when the Oklahoma City Thunder come to town, it represents one of the marquee dates on the TD Garden calendar. But this season, OKC will be without its top two stars in its only 2014-15 visit to Boston as Kevin Durant (foot) and Russell Westbrook (hand) aren't scheduled to return from injury until December at the earliest. The Thunder entered Tuesday night's game against the Bucks in Milwaukee with a 2-5 record. The Celtics have won two straight and are 3-3 on the young season.

NFL power rankings | by Matt Burke

No. 1

Patriots (7-2)

This is the first November in years that our preseason picks are still poised to make the big game, so we'll use this space to gloat. You heard it here in August: Pats vs. Eagles in the Super Bowl.

No. 2

Eagles (7-2)

In late September, who would have guessed that Tom Brady, Mark Sanchez and Drew Stanton would have been the quarterbacks of the three best teams in the NFL in early November?

No. 3

Cardinals (8-1)

Larry Fitzgerald has over 100 yards receiving in two of his last three games, John and Jaron Brown are coming on strong and Andre Ellington and Michael Floyd are still capable of huge outings.

No. 4

Broncos (7-2)

Peyton Manning threw for five touchdowns against Oakland. To borrow a popular phrase from 2012, ironically the last season Wes Welker had a 100-yard receiving day: We're not impressed.

No. 5

Seahawks (6-3)

The 'Hawks have won three games in a row, and suddenly no one cares that Pete Carroll and Marshawn Lynch don't talk to one another. Seattle does have a brutal stretch of schedule coming up, however.

No. 6

Lions (7-2)

If you like football, go ahead and tell your family now. You won't be talking to them on Thanksgiving with the Lions and Cowboys both good at the same time for the first time since 1993.

No. 7

Colts (6-3)

It's entirely possible that the Colts will be exposed by the Patriots this Sunday night. Remember, it was just a few weeks back that Indy allowed 51 points to the now-laughable Steelers.

No. 8

Packers (6-3)

You can look at the Packers one of two ways: Either you say they haven't beaten anyone of note yet, or you could say there's no shame in losing at Seattle, at Detroit and at New Orleans.

No. 9

Chiefs (6-3)

Their 17-13 win at Buffalo this past Sunday may have been their most impressive victory of the season. And this is a team that blew out the Pats at home and beat San Diego on the road. The gritty wins linger.
